

Roaming around the vast space of ISE 2014 one can spot some very interesting products--such as the admittedly impressive Concert series speakers from Steinway Lyngdorf.

Steinway is most famous for its pianos, but it also makes very high-end audio products. How high-end? Enough to demand pricetags starting off from $40000 for a more basic (relatively speaking, of course) 5.1 system to up to $200000 for a gigantic Concert loudspeaker.

Introduced at ISE are the LS-R210 and LS-R212 boundary woofers, rear-firing systems promising the simultaneous arrival of first critical reflections and direct sound to listening position within a compact understated design.

"The design and performance of these new woofers is as pristine and as perfect as our customers have come to expect from Steinway Lyngdorf," the company says.

Also seen at the show is the Concert loudspeaker, probably one of the ultimates in audiophile-grade speakers.

Go Steinway Lyngdorf