

The Gold-Plated Aquavision TV

Written by Frederick Douglas
11. 02. 2020

Luxury and outdoor TV maker Aquavision announces a TV aimed strictly at the luxury end of the consumer market-- the DB100, a set featuring 24-carat gold plating and a price tag of no less than £108000.

The DB100 comes at a massive 100-inch, and has a 4K LCD panel. It is manufactured in the UK, and collaboration with Bang & Olufsen makes it compatible with products from the Nordic high-end audio brand. As such, customers can control the TV using a B&O remote control, and it is ready for integration with B&O hardware. On the software side the TV runs on Android 6, and it comes with both HD and satellite tuners. It also features a toughened anti-reflective glass front.

“There is a growing demand for luxury electronic items from consumers around the world and the TV market is no different,” Aquavision says. “Homes today are radically different environments to the homes of the past. Advances in technology has revolutionised the very nature of what a home is. From where we used to simply live, we now live, work, rest and play-- and people want to do it in style."

The Gold-Plated Aquavision TV

Written by Frederick Douglas

11. 02. 2020

The DB100 is set for a Q1 2020 launch. The company says it already has orders from the UK, M. East and USA, and hopes more will follow as it kicks off a global marketing drive.

Go Aquavision Launches Exclusive DB range of TVs into Harrods Department Store