

SnapAV continues with the acquisitions as it buys Autonomic, the company best known for the Mirage streaming players, as well as multiroom amplifiers, mobile device apps and in-wall keypads.

Financial details of the deal are not available.

“We are thrilled to add Autonomic to the SnapAV lineup,” SnapAV says. “This is a company that focuses on the custom channel and has shown continuous expertise in the media streaming category. Autonomic has the right products, people, and culture to make this deal a success for everyone involved, including our dealers.”

SnapAV is the owner of leading brands in multiple product categories. These include loudspeakers (Episode), networking (Araknis), video surveillance (Luma), A/V distribution and cables (Binary), power management (WattBox), equipment racks and TV mounts (Strong), structured wiring (Wirepath) and outdoor TVs (SunBrite). Last month saw it buy Florida-based surveillance equipment manufacturer Visualint.

With Autonomic it gets a product range complete with integration with leading control systems, such as Savant, Crestron, Control4 and URC, and compatibility with multiple music services. Autonomic products also support high-resolution 24-bit/192kHz audio and DTS Play-Fi.
