Former CEDIA president and CEO Vin Bruno finds a new job as he joins the board of Rayva, the company offering the concept of pre-engineered, turnkey home theatre packages.

Founded in 2016 by industry veterans George Walter, Theo Kalomirakis and David Rodarte, Rayva is an effort to bring the dedicated home theatre back in the industry. It pitches turnkey systems complete with architectural drawings, audio, video, lighting and control products, acoustical panels, seating, and even installation and warranties.

Currently Rayva offers four packages at different price ranges. All theatres are ready-to-install, and as such differ mainly in colour choices for floors, walls and seatings.

“I’m proud and excited to join Rayva’s Board of Directors,” Bruno says. “I will do everything possible to help grow this important business. Rayva helps our industry to prosper as manufacturers of projectors, screens, theatre seats, audio equipment, and controls provide these home theatre components, and our community of technology integrators build them for clients, allowing homeowners and their families to enjoy movies the way the directors intended.”
