Netflix confirms what was long rumoured-- the video service will launch in the UK and Ireland in "early 2012."

It won't offer DVD rentals though, instead promising unlimited streaming video-on-demand on PCs, tablets and mobile devices "for one low monthly subscription price."

No details on pricing or supported devices are available yet, though the company will announce more details "closer to launch" or at its Q3 2011 earnings call.

Netflix will face company in the UK from current video-on-demand market holder Lovefilm.

Meanwhile no official word is yet available regarding the Spanish Netflix launch, which reportedly happen on January 2012 according to FAPAE, the Spanish producers association.
